Your Task

Imagine you are a reporter for a newspaper. Your editor has just told you to write a story about tax evasion indicted together with a group of colleagues. However, before you can write the story, you and your colleagues need to collect in 15 minutes a number of documents that will support writing the story.

Your group distributes the work by splitting the task into two subtasks: (1) finding useful documents and (2) examining them in detail.

Some of your colleagues will be saving documents while you look at them in details. Your job is to carefully examine the documents in the shared list and retain the most useful ones. You can also conduct your own searches and add documents to this shared list. The final list will be shared with your editor.

Note that there is a chat tool you can use to communicate with your colleagues about the task and coordinate yourselves.

Documents should be collected that comply with the following criteria:

Identify individuals or corporations that have been indicted on charges of tax evasion of more than two million dollars in the U.S. or U.K.
